

I understand the concern that people have regarding cell phone use on airplanes, but I, and I think many other people would really love to be able to use our wireless devices for purposes other than talking. As handheld wireless devices become more sophisticated and more popular, more and more people will want to be able to access their email and other silent forms of communication. In addressing other concerns in your consideration, please keep in mind that cellular access does not have to be about talking, and will be less and less about actually talking in the near future.

Thank you.
